Weave: The Social Fabric Project

What is social trust?

“Social trust is a belief in the honesty, integrity, and reliability of others - a faith in people”

Pew Research Center (2007)

Why does social trust matter?

Without trust, we can experience isolation that leads to physical and mental health challenges. Lack of trust also creates barriers to tackling pressing social and economic issues.

Social trust is what binds our social fabric and makes our communities and nation strong.

The Challenge

The United States is grappling with a profound erosion of social trust.

Less than half of US adults say they trust most or all their neighbors.

Pew Research Center (2025)

8%
decrease since 2015

US adults are more likely to say their fellow Americans are morally bad than good.

Pew Research Center (2026)

53%
say morally bad

“The reality is that democracy and the economy rest upon a foundation, which is society. A society is a system of relationships. If there is no trust at the foundations of society, if there is no goodness, care, or faithfulness, relationships crumble, and the market and the state crash to pieces.”

David Brooks

The Relationalist Manifesto

The Solution

Social trust is grown by cultivating relationships.
Creating deep relationships with others where they live, work or learn builds social trust.

In other words, the solution is weaving.

What is weaving?

Weaving is the practice of building meaningful relationships that set the conditions for social trust to grow in communities.

Weaving invites people to:

Discover what they have in common

Learn how their differences can make the community
stronger

Work side by side
towards the common good

Weaving can be formal or informal,
and all weaving shares four qualities:

Welcoming

It invites people to join as they are

Continuous

It builds relationships that deepen over time through ongoing engagement

Local

It brings together people who share the same neighborhood, town, or region

Mutual

Every participant both gives and receives benefits

While many kinds of community building are positive....

Starting a food garden where neighbors plant and harvest their individual plots.

...Weaving goes deeper by centering relationships and building social trust.

Starting a community garden as a means to strengthen bonds between neighbors. Folks build relationships while farming a shared plot, cooking together, and providing produce to neighbors without access to fresh foods.

Why weaving?

What makes us think weaving is the solution?

Relationships establish social capital

Increasing the number and quality of relationships people have within their local communities not only reduces social isolation and improves mental and physical health, but also increases social capital: the networks of relationships that people can draw on when they need help, information, or opportunities (Putnam, 1993; Putnam, 2000). These networks not only make it easier for communities to work together to solve shared problems, but also are key to developing trust.

Moreover, the four qualities of weaving are grounded in key insights from social psychology about how meaningful relationships are formed.

Who are weavers?

Weavers spread trust in their communities by showing up for others. Weavers are people who:

- Recognize the dignity in every person
- Strengthen relationships across differences
- Focus on shared needs and local strengths
- Make and keep commitments to others
- Invest time in meaningful connection

Weavers often know their neighborhoods deeply and are known and trusted in return. They reach out to neighbors who may feel isolated or unseen and understand that lasting change often begins close to home.

weavers show up consistently & create spaces where others feel they belong

Weavers spark a virtuous cycle of change

Weaving - When Weave inspires weavers, they grow their weaving efforts, which in turn foster stronger relationships among community members.

Relationships - As these relationships deepen, people experience a greater sense of belonging in their communities and social trust grows.

Trust - With higher levels of trust and belonging, community members feel more able and willing to connect, leading to more weaving.

Weave's key objective is to grow a people-powered movement that builds social trust nationwide by inspiring weavers in local communities.

What are norms?

Norms are the unwritten rules that guide how people are expected to behave

How does social trust shift norms?

As trust grows within a community, community norms will change. People's sense of what should be normal is shaped by what is normal.

So when most community members trust one another, trust becomes the expectation.

Norm change snowballs and leads to societal narrative change

When we inspire more weaving by more weavers in many communities, we will:

Spur an American society where belonging
and trust are the norm

Create a new national narrative that promotes hope and connection

Weave's Theory of Change

- #1 If Weave inspires weavers in local communities, then weavers will grow their weaving efforts.
- #2 If weavers grow their weaving efforts, then relationships will strengthen among neighbors.
- #3 If neighborhood relationships strengthen, then social trust will gradually build in weavers' communities.
- #4 If social trust grows in communities, then more community members will feel able to come together through weaving, thus stepping into the role of ¹²weaver.
- #5 If this virtuous cycle continues, then community norms will shift so that trust and connection become the expectation.
- #6 If these norms take root in communities nationwide, then U.S. culture will gradually change.
